Course Description:

The purpose of this course is to introduce students to Anthropology, the academic discipline which focuses upon the study of humanity and its inherent change and development over time. The primary content of the course will focus upon the distinct ways in which humans create, maintain, and interpret the social worlds in which they live, and also the manners in which they discern and interpret the social worlds of others. Topics within the course will include, but are not limited to, the following: culture, diversity, anthropological theories and research methodologies, the interweave of social culture and the physical environment, mate selection and marriage, the meanings of kinship across societies, gender and gender roles, social inequality and stratification, the role of religion in society, race/ethnicity, political institutions. This course is intended to provide students with an understanding of the discipline of anthropology, and its utility in understanding the social worlds in which we live.

Course Objectives:

The primary objectives for this course are:

- To gain an understanding of the discipline of anthropology
- To better understand the nature of diversity within societies
- To critically examine the theoretical and empirical approaches used to study culture
- To be able to discern and evaluate stereotypes and misconceptions of cultures and societies around the globe
- To better comprehend the complex connections between individuals and the social and cultural contexts in which they live

Required Textbooks:
